Keeping you up to date on Competition and EU law

The holes were actually in the cheese. The CJEU confirms the AG's perspective on exclusive distribution. A recent landmark CJEU ruling in the Beevers Kaas case significantly impacts how companies must structure their exclusive distribution arrangements. The Court clarified that merely allocating exclusive territories is insufficient - suppliers must ensure all distributors explicitly agree to respect these exclusivity rights through proper documentation. In-house counsel should note that this ruling affects both existing and future distribution agreements under the VBER. Companies relying on territorial or customer group exclusivity may find their current arrangements inadequate, potentially exposing them to disputes with distributors and competition law risks. Read our full analysis to understand how to implement the required "parallel imposition requirement" and safeguard your distribution networks across the EU. Bronner revis(it)ed? Recent Takeaways on application of the Bronner doctrine from the CJEU and the Dutch court Understanding when refusals to provide access to data and digital infrastructure constitute an abuse of dominance is essential for Bronner doctrine, which established the high threshold for when compliance and strategic decision-making in today's data-driven economy. Recent landmark judgments from the CJEU and Dutch authorities have significantly clarified the application of the seminal companies must provide access to their infrastructure Two February 2025 rulings offer contrasting approaches that create new boundaries for the doctrine's application in digital markets.

We would like to share that José Rivas has retired from the Bird & Bird partnership after nearly 17 years of distinguished service with our Competition Law practice. He was the longest-practicing Spanish lawyer in private EU Law practice in Brussels, having spent over 30 years in the capital of Europe. Before his retirement at the end of April, José represented our firm at the prestigious annual GCLC conference Present and future role of competition policy and the EU's open strategic autonomy, where he moderated an insightful panel discussion on the topic of A Forward-Looking Vision for the Future of EU Competition Tools to achieve a Clean, Just and Competitive Transition in view of the EU Open Strategic Autonomy Goals.
