Bryony brings in-depth knowledge of the media, technology and communications industries to clients facing UK or international commercial litigation.

Bryony is an associate in our Dispute Resolution Group, based in London, specialising in commercial litigation and technology and media law.

She advises our clients on complex, fact-heavy commercial disputes, with a primary focus on disputes relating to the technology, communications and media sectors. She acts for both corporate clients (including IT and telecommunications providers, major film and broadcasting organisations, and internet corporations) and individuals on disputes spanning the commercial spectrum.

Her experience includes advising on contractual disputes, warranty and fraud claims, agency issues, minority shareholder actions, partnership and joint venture disputes, judicial review proceedings and defamation and privacy actions. She is also experienced in advising on pre-action steps such as freezing injunctions, search orders and third party disclosure orders, and has advised clients in relation to cyber-security breach responses and internal investigations.

Bryony has also completed two client secondments at ITV plc where she gained valuable knowledge of the commercial and regulatory environments in which broadcasting organisations operate.
