

Bird & Bird & data protection update

July 2013

We are enclosing our latest data protection update of news and developments in June.

Key points to note are as follows:

1. The ICO has released its annual report;
2. An Opinion by the Advocate General of the European Union Court of Justice states there is no 'right to be forgotten' by search engine providers;
3. A new Regulation altering the procedure for E-Privacy Directive telecoms breach reporting has been adopted; and
4. The Irish Presidency of the Council of the European Union has published a draft compromise text of the Draft General Data Protection Regulation.

ICO sends letter to Ministry of Justice on draft EU Data Protection Regulation

ICO has published the letter sent to the Justice Secretary expressing concerns about the ability of the ICO to implement the draft Data Protection Regulation without additional resources.

The main points covered in the letter are:

- The Information Commissioner recognises the need for a new, effective data protection regime.
- There are concerns about the burdens the proposals will place on the ICO and other data protection authorities (DPAs). Breach reporting, sanctions, prior assessment of transfers and the consistency mechanism are all singled out as being burdensome.
- The ICO's funding concerns are compounded by abolition of the notification system, which the ICO anticipates will leave it with a £16 million funding shortfall.

ICO publishes guidance on social networking and online forums

The new guidance replaces ICO's 2007 guidance on this topic.

Issues covered include:

- a summary of provisions of the DPA which relate to online forums;
- guidance about how to determine whether an online forum is being used for non-domestic purposes;
- guidance on running an online forum; and
- information about ICO involvement in complaints against those running social networking sites (both organisations and individuals).

The guidance is consistent with the Article 29 Working Party Opinion on online social networking in 2009, and takes on board comments made in the Solicitors From Hell case, which was critical of ICO's reluctance to intervene in cases where individuals complained about inaccurate data on such forums. The document also gives good guidance to data controllers on their responsibilities under the DPA.

The full guidance can be accessed here.

ICO releases Annual Report

Key statistics include:

- £2.6m total civil monetary penalties were imposed on 23 organisations;
- Fifty-five pieces of guidance on the Freedom of Information Act were published or revised;
- Following surveys it was revealed that 86% of individuals were aware of their specific rights under the Freedom of Information Act and 87% of individuals were aware of the right to see information held about them;
- Fifty-eight audits were conducted of data controllers, an increase of 38%; and
- 225,138 calls received by the ICO's helpline, an increase of 3.7%.

Ministry of Justice call for evidence over proposed cybersecurity directive

This Ministry of Justice has closed its call for evidence over the proposed EU cybersecurity directive. The consultation speculated that similar triggers to those applied to telecoms breach reporting under the E-Privacy directive might apply to the new breach reporting requirements contained in the proposed legislation. The consultation in particular sought feedback from stakeholders on how the proposal might affect those businesses that would be required to report breaches as "market operators". The latest reports from Europe have suggested that several delegations in the Council would prefer a less prescriptive regime.

EAT confirms that use of covert surveillance does not necessarily make a dismissal unfair.

In the case of City and County of Swansea v Gayle UKEAT/0501/12 before the Employment Appeal Tribunal, the council successfully appealed against an Employment Tribunal decision that the council's investigation into Mr Gayle's misconduct had unjustly interfered with his Article 8 right to privacy and was contrary to the ICO's Employment Practices Code. The council had engaged a private investigator to check rumours that Mr Gayle was playing squash during work hours then returning to clock off. The investigator had covertly filmed Mr Gayle 5 times outside a sports centre, which led to his dismissal for misconduct.

The EAT ruled that Article 8 was not engaged, because:

- Mr Gayle was filmed in a public place, where he would not have a reasonable expectation of privacy;
- Mr Gayle was filmed during his work hours, when an employer is entitled to know his whereabouts; and
- Mr Gayle was defrauding his employer, and so was not entitled to a right to privacy.

Even had Article 8(1) been engaged, the EAT noted that the council could have relied on the legitimate aims of preventing crimes and protecting their own rights. The EAT also said that the Tribunal had overstated the importance of the Employment Practices Code, which should not be considered to have statutory effect – failure to follow the guidance shouldn't itself make a dismissal unfair.

Cases

Google Spain SL, Google Inc. v Agencia Española de Protección de Datos Opinion of the Advocate General Court of Justice of the European Union Case C- 131/12 25 June 2013	Advocate General opines that search engine service providers are not data controllers for the personal data appearing on web pages indexed by their service In February 2010, the subject of a national newspaper article from a decade ago contacted Google Spain and requested that the search results show no links to the newspaper when his name and surnames were entered into Google's search engine. Google Spain forwarded the request to Google Inc. in California taking the view that the latter was the undertaking providing the internet search service. The Agencia Española de Protección de Datos (Spanish Data Protection Agency, AEPD) upheld the complaint against Google Spain and Google Inc., calling on them to withdraw the data from their index and to render future access to them impossible. Google Inc. and Google Spain brought two appeals before the Audiencia Nacional (National High Court, Spain), seeking annulment of the AEPD decision. The Audiencia Nacional referred a series of questions to the European Court of Justice. Advocate General Niilo Jääskinen's Opinion firstly addressed the question of the territorial scope of the application of national data protection legislation. He argued that Member State law applies where there is an establishment in that state involved in selling targeted advertising to inhabitants of a Member State, even if the technical data processing operations are situated in other Member States or third countries. The Opinion concludes that national data protection authorities cannot require an internet search engine service provider to withdraw information from its index except in cases where this service provider has not complied with exclusion codes or where a request from a website regarding an update of cache memory has not been honoured. A possible 'notice and take down procedure' concerning links to source web pages with illegal or inappropriate content is a matter for national civil liability law based on grounds other than data protection. The Advocate General was also of the view that the Data Protection Directive does not establish a general 'right to be forgotten'. The opinion of the Advocate General is not binding. A full decision is to be made by the EU Court of Justice by the end of the year. The Opinion of the Advocate General can be read here.

Draft Data Protection Regulation and Directive

06 June 2013

Draft compromise text of the General Data Protection Regulation released

The Irish Presidency of the Council of the European Union released its response to Chapters I – IV of the draft General Data Protection Regulation.

Comments include:

- The addition of 'pseudonymised' data as a sub-category of personal data, rather than a sub-category of anonymous data or as a third type of data at Article 4(2a);
- The addition of a recital clarifying the right to data protection as a qualified right;
- A reversion to the current position for valid consent under the Directive ie a requirement of 'unambiguous' consent. (Except in the case of processing sensitive personal data (Recital 25 and Article 9(2)); and
- Data controllers should not be required to provide fair processing notices where data is collected from publicly available sources (Article 14a(4)(c)).

European Commission adopts new regulation in relation to telecoms data breaches

The European Commission adopted on 24 June a Commission Regulation on data breaches for telecoms operators and Internet Service Providers (ISPs) to handle situations where their customers' personal data is lost, stolen or otherwise compromised. The Regulation was published in the OJEU on 26 June and will come into force on 25 August 2013.

Companies will have extra clarity about how to meet those obligations, and customers will have extra assurance about how such breaches will be dealt with. Companies must:

- Inform the competent national authority of the incident within 24 hours after detection of the breach, in order to maximise its confinement. If full disclosure is not possible within that period, they should provide an initial set of information within 24 hours, with the rest to follow within three days;
- Outline which pieces of information are affected and what measures have been or will be applied by the company; and
- Make use of a standardised format (for example an online form that is the same in all EU Member States) for notifying the competent national authority.

In assessing whether to notify subscribers (i.e. by applying the test of whether the breach is likely to adversely affect personal data or privacy), companies should pay attention to the type of data compromised, particularly, in the context of the telecoms sector, financial information, location data, internet log files, web browsing histories, e-mail data, and itemised call lists.

The Commission also wishes to incentivise companies to encrypt personal data and has published an indicative list of technological protection measures, such as encryption techniques, which would render the data unintelligible.

11 June 2013	Google Inc.	Enforcement notice	In 2010, the Information Commissioner's Office became aware that the data controller's Street View vehicles had mistakenly collected personal data relating to thousands of individuals. This information included email addresses, URLs and passwords. An undertaking was entered into by Google to delete all payload data collected in the UK which the data controller had no outstanding legal obligation to retain. Following this, in 2012, the data controller reported that they had accidentally retained five discs which contained payload data collected in the UK.	The ICO issued an enforcement notice, with the data controller to: <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li data-bbox="1473 539 2101 627">1) securely destroy within thirty-five days, any personal data held on vehicles discs and collected in the UK using Street View vehicles; and<li data-bbox="1473 659 2101 746">2) promptly inform the Information Commissioner should they discover a Street View vehicle disc holding personal data collected in the UK. The full enforcement notice can be found here.

Date	Entity	Enforcement notice, undertaking or monetary penalty?	Description	Summary of steps required (in addition to the usual steps*)
12 June 2013	Central Bedfordshire Council	Undertaking	An individual's sensitive personal data had been made publicly accessible without consent via a planning portal on the Council's website. The data controller also reported the inappropriate obtaining and use of sensitive personal data held in a social care database by two employees. Central Bedfordshire Council undertook to ensure that that the procedures covering the preparation of planning application documentation for publication would be followed by staff and that all legacy data from the previous authority would be removed by 31 March 2013.	The data controller undertakes to ensure that: <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li data-bbox="1473 504 2033 592">(1) The procedures covering the preparation of planning application documentation for publication are followed by staff;<li data-bbox="1473 627 2107 775">(2) Staff are aware of the data controller's procedures for the preparation of planning application documentation for publication and are appropriately trained how to follow those procedures;<li data-bbox="1473 810 2123 927">(3) By 31 March 2013 the social care database referred to in this undertaking contains a completely cleansed dataset free from unnecessary legacy data originating from the previous local authority; and<li data-bbox="1473 962 2123 1110">(4) The data controller shall implement such other security measures as are appropriate to ensure that personal data is protected against unauthorised and unlawful processing, accidental loss, destruction, and/or damage. The full undertaking can be found here.

Date	Entity	Enforcement notice, undertaking or monetary penalty?	Description	Summary of steps required (in addition to the usual steps*)
12 June 2013	Bedford Borough Council	Undertaking	A social care record, containing sensitive personal data, was inherited by two new unitary local authorities from the previous authority's social care database. This record had been compromised by the inappropriate actions of two of its employees. As a result both new unitary authorities inherited records not relevant to their provision of social care services. Bedford Borough Council undertook that all legacy data from the previous authority would be removed by 31 March 2013.	The data controller undertakes to ensure that: (1) By 31 March 2013 the social care database referred to in this undertaking contains a completely cleansed dataset free from unnecessary legacy data originating from the previous local authority; and (2) The data controller shall implement such other security measures as are appropriate to ensure that personal data is protected against unauthorised and unlawful processing, accidental loss, destruction, and/or damage. The full undertaking can be read here .

Date	Entity	Enforcement notice, undertaking or monetary penalty?	Description	Summary of steps required (in addition to the usual steps*)
13 June 2013	North Staffordshire Combined Healthcare NHS Trust	Monetary Penalty	The data controller sent several faxes containing sensitive personal data about vulnerable adults to a member of the public in error. The faxes were intended for a Wellbeing Centre which provides psychological therapies. The ICO report found a serious contravention of section 4(4) of the Data Protection Act through a failure to ensure a level of security appropriate to the harm that might result from such unauthorised processing and the inappropriate organisational measures taken by the data controller.	A monetary penalty of £55,000 was issued by the ICO. The monetary penalty notice can be read here.

Date	Entity	Enforcement notice, undertaking or monetary penalty?	Description	Summary of steps required (in addition to the usual steps*)
18 June 2013	Nationwide Energy Services & We Claim You Gain	Monetary Penalty	Both companies are part of Save Britain Money Limited and were found to be responsible for over 2,700 complaints to the Telephone Preference Service or reports to the ICO over a 19 month period from May 2011 for direct marketing. The ICO found these activities to be a breach of Regulation 21 of the Privacy and Electronic Communications Regulations (PECR) on numerous grounds but particularly noted that both companies ignored recognised industry practices to avoid breaches of PECR and showed complete disregard for the requirements of the law.	Monetary penalties of £125,000 and £100,000 were issued by the ICO to Nationwide Energy Services and We Claim You Gain respectively. The monetary penalty notice for Nationwide Energy Services can be read here. The monetary penalty notice for We Claim You Gain can be accessed here.

*The usual steps required of an entity are to give undertakings that:

1. Staff are made aware of the data controller's data protection policy and procedures, and are adequately trained on how to follow these; and
2. The data controller shall implement such other security measures as it deems appropriate to ensure that personal data is protected against unauthorised and unlawful processing, accidental loss, destruction and/or damage.
